Super Story

A Roman noblewoman once asked R' Yossi, "In how many days did your Hashem create the world?" "In six," he answered. "And since then," she asked, "what has he been doing?" "Matching couples for marriage," responded R' Yossi. "That's it!" she said dismissively. "Even I can do that. I have many slaves, both male and female. In no time at all, I can match them for marriage." To which R' Yossi countered, "Though this may be an easy thing for you to do, for Hashem it is as difficult as splitting the Sea of Reeds."

The next day the Roman noblewoman lined up a thousand male and a thousand female slaves and paired them off before nightfall. The morning after, her estate resembled a battlefield. One slave had his head bashed in, another had lost an eye, while a third hobbled because of a broken leg. No one seemed to want his or her assigned mate. Quickly, she summoned R' Yossi and acknowledged. "Your Hashem is unique and your Torah is true, pleasing and praiseworthy. You spoke wisely."
